According to Web analytics firm SimilarWeb, our online newsmagazine National Vanguard now has more than four times the audience of the Web site of the prominent Jewish hate group, the Simon Wiesenthal Center.

Notable Success Expanding Our Online Audience

The readership of National Vanguard (nationalvanguard.org) continues to grow — to the point where, if current trends continue, we will be competitive in terms of audience to the major anti-White Web sites (such as the Anti-Defamation League's) and mid-size controlled media outlets. Some of them we have already surpassed. Our enemies have not failed to notice this, as we will discuss later in this BULLETIN.

The graphics that accompany this article show the latest readership statistics gathered by the independent Web audience analytics firm, SimilarWeb.

Nationalvanguard.org, with 351,000 site visits in the last month alone, has well over four times the audience of the Simon Wiesenthal Center, one of the leading Jewish pressure groups in this country, and which has an annual budget of $27,000,000.

Our online magazine now also reaches over 60 per cent. of the online numbers of a major state capital newspaper, West Virginia's widely-read Charleston Gazette — which is well-known, by the way, for its biased reporting regarding them the Alliance and our campus in the eastern mountains of that state.

Nationalvanguard.org's online audience is now nearly half the size of that of the national Democratic party — democrats.org. (Yes, the same party that ran Hillary Clinton for president last year.) We're further behind Donald Trump's party's site — gop.com — but it is still a very impressive achievement for us to have almost a quarter of the readership of the site of America's ruling political party, which has a sitting president in the White House.

TOP: National Vanguard's reader base has now pulled about even with that of a medium-sized regional newspaper, Johnstown, Pennsylvania's Tribune-Democrat. BOTTOM: Even more impressively, our readership is now approaching 50 per cent. of that of democrats.org, the Web site of the national Democratic Party.

And it's also rather impressive that we have, with a very small but dedicated staff and almost no budget, achieved about the same percentage of the online audience — approaching a quarter — of the vicious, mendacious, but extremely wealthy Southern Poverty Law Center and their ill-gotten quarter-billion-dollar war chest. We're doing even better than that compared to the Jewish "Anti-Defamation League," with almost one-third of their audience numbers, despite their $61 million annual budget.

It is true that some White advocacy sites have even higher rankings than ours (and more power to them; we need gateways to our hard truths) — but some of these sites are forums, and it is very hard for an online magazine, with its few high-value articles every day, to compete with a forum in terms of numbers, with the forum's hundreds of daily posts and replies (most of them of only moderate to low value). But we can now proudly announce that nationalvanguard.org has far surpassed the readership of the allegedly pro-White forum that has been the main venue for anti-Alliance attacks and rumor-mongering.

There are a few so-called “alt right” sites with higher rankings than ours, some comparable to the ADL’s in terms of readership. But these sites are very “famous” in terms of getting almost continuous controlled media coverage; and they also have a wide-open “big tent” and “fluid principles” approach which helps them gain short-term readership. That we can achieve a large fraction of those sites’ readership with our uncompromising racial thinking is a great testament to our staff and supporters — and the soundness of our founding principles. We thank all of you who have helped us get this far: our donors, members, supporters, volunteers, and those who help us behind the scenes. Truth and racial loyalty are powerful weapons, more powerful than we imagined before.

One thing is certain, though: We, unlike some of our competitors, do not have a multi-million dollar annual budget — not even one million, not even close. We would be very interested in speaking with members with experience in marketing to help us leverage our substantial audience into a much more substantial level of support than what we currently enjoy.

Hackers Attack National Vanguard

Over Thanksgiving weekend, our Media Director had to give up all other projects and activities in order to keep nationalvanguard.org online. Hackers operating a “botnet” of thousands of infected computers concentrated all of their fire on our online magazine, overloading our servers until the site would no longer load in readers’ browsers.

It was not possible to locate the attackers, since botnets by their very nature transmit their attacks from dozens or hundreds of locations simultaneously. (A significant number of the compromised systems that constituted the botnet were located in Israel and Ukraine, though the location of the attackers’ central command cannot be known.) Hackers today are seldom ideologically motivated, by the way — but often offer their services to those who are so motivated; in fact, to anyone who can pay a quarter of a Bitcoin or so.

National Vanguard was up and down for about 48 hours, as various efforts were made to mitigate the attack. Eventually we were able to segregate and then throttle the incoming malicious packets; readers could then access the site again. We incurred considerable expense hardening our server and adding two new layers of protection to our site.

It is realistic to expect further and even more sophisticated attacks in the future, as National Vanguard continues to succeed and expand its audience. It is also realistic to expect higher and higher expenses will be required to mitigate such attacks.

Another Attempt to Financially Cripple the Alliance

On the Friday following the Thanksgiving holiday, the campaign to demonetize our cause struck again. This time our enemies induced financial provider Stripe to deny us service and strip the Cosmotheist Community Church of its main payment gateway. As of this writing, we are still up and running with an alternate provider. As we look to find a permanent solution to this problem, we ask supporters to make contributions via the regular mail at any time our online services are down. And we ask members to promote the channels that remain open to us far and wide.

One hope that people often convey to us is that new dissident-friendly service providers will emerge in the near future. The technology and know-how certainly exist and, to some extent, so does the will. The problem is that the characteristic length-scales of time and financial investments required to set up such services exceeds by orders-of-magnitude the length-scales and financial investments required to take them down; the wills probably being around even.

One such new service that has been set up is Hatreon, the crowdfunding service explicitly designed to accommodate dissidents. We continue to use Hatreon and supporters can pledge donations through the service by opening a Hatreon account of their own. It can't be used for purchases, though — only donations. The URL link below will take you directly to the National Alliances "creator" page where you can make a recurring monthly pledge. (A one-time pledge can be made by setting the end date appropriately.) https://www.hatreon.net/NA_Chairman/

Alliance Fliers Trigger Controlled Media Again

The regional media in what's known as the Quad Cities area (QC or QCA), including Davenport, Iowa, are still sensationalizing the story about National Alliance fliers being distributed there. Our fliers simply state "Love your race," along with our Web site address. The region's main new site reported as follows:

On a quiet street in Davenport neighbors got a rude awakening Sunday morning. Elesha Gayman says when she went to drop off her 4-year-old son at her parent's Davenport home, she found a disturbing flier in their driveway. The flier was wrapped around weekend advertisements that had been delivered with the Sunday newspaper. They read 'Love Your Race,' and listed a link to [the National Alliance Web site].

This isn't the first time people in Davenport have seen these messages. Back in August fliers by the same group were found on car windshields... A no-hate group [headed by a local rabbi] called One Human Family QCA started a 'No-Hate Rally' in response to the fliers, with thousands of people showing up in support. Neighbors say they want those posting the flier to know 'hate has no home here.'

But now they say knowing someone was so close to their homes means the [National Alliance] doesn't seem to be going away.

"It is very disheartening because there's [sic] web addresses on it and kids have access to tablets and anything. I really do worry about kids finding it," said Gayman. But neighbors say they won't be deterred by the disturbing signs, and will continue to push for unity throughout the community. "We need to love one another and love our neighbors," said Gayman.

Congratulations to our activists in the QC area for raising the racial consciousness of their White neighbors with our love literature. It's amazing that such a story would appear multiple times in the main news portal and newspaper of record for that region, and even more remarkable that they would keep displaying the Alliance's contact information to their readers. Watchers of local television news also were able to see the National Alliance main page address. Our full report, along with the television news video, can be seen here: <https://nationalvanguard.org/2017/11/iowa-national-alliance-love-your-race-message-triggers-hysteria/>

Surely some will see the contradiction in Ms. Gayman's calling for "love," while simultaneously calling on everyone to hate and condemn the Alliance's simple "love your race" message. Gayman is presented simply as a "concerned neighbor," but she is actually a leftist political figure locally. Her claim to fame, before attaining her current position as secretary for an outfit called NAMI (National Alliance on Mental Illness), was being the youngest member of the Iowa House of Representatives 12 years ago. She's known for her advocacy for those she calls her "LGBTQ friends." Are NAMI supporters aware that their secretary is stirring up her community to hate members of the National Alliance, a legitimate educational organization that has been advocating for White interests since it was incorporated in the Commonwealth of Virginia before Elesha Gayman was born? We in the Alliance believe that most of Elesha's straight White neighbors (the normal ones, at least) would trust their children with us before they would with her peculiar "friends" — none of whom, by the way, would be eligible for Alliance membership.

Rose Schmidt's Generous Gift

Rose Schmidt, widow of the distinguished writer and activist Hans Schmidt, has been in the process of moving from the magnificent estate in western North Carolina where she and her husband lived and worked together for years. The large historical research library accumulated by Mr. Schmidt was, in recent days, being gradually transferred to Ingrid Rimland Zundel's facility in Tennessee. (The photo of Ingrid's library that appeared on the front of the October BULLETIN was mostly comprised of the Schmidts' collection of 12,000-plus books that had already been donated to the care of Mrs. Zundel by Mrs. Schmidt.)

Mrs. Schmidt had also planned to donate the remaining books to the Zundel library before she moved — until, that is, she learned of Ingrid's passing in October.

Because it had become known that Chairman Williams is planning to build a world-class racist library with Dr. William Pierce's research library as its core, word came down the grapevine that those books, along with the remaining inventory of books authored by Hans Schmidt — some which were carried in the old National Vanguard Books catalog — would find a good home with the National Alliance. It certainly helps that Rose and Ingrid both knew and respected Dr. Pierce and supported his work for our people, as did their husbands. So, with only a couple of days before Rose was scheduled with the movers to vacate her estate, Chairman Williams and Alliance volunteers arranged, on short notice, the logistics required (big box trucks, labor, etc.) to carefully move more than 300 cases of books from North Carolina to secure locations near the National Office.

The titles by Hans Schmidt will soon be offered to our members and the public.

The can-do attitude of our members to adapt, rise to the challenge, and deliver when a serendipitous opportunity — like receiving Hans Schmidt's books — presents itself, helps boost the Alliance's image as can-do winners, and gains confidence and support from those we want to attract, especially among book-lovin' White radicals.

It is rumored that Ingrid Rimland's sole heir, her son Rudy, has told people that he "wants to fulfill his mother's wishes" as to the disposition of her library and her and her husband's political archives. That, if true, would be excellent news. We hear that Rudy is not of the same racially responsible political persuasion as was his mother, so probably has little interest in her race-centered collection of books, as books. We can hope that a will turns up wherein Ingrid's wishes, particularly provisions concerning her library, are made clear in writing; or that she made those wishes explicit to her son before she died. The fact that Rudy is Ingrid's executor likely indicates that a will exists. Anyone reading this who can throw some light on these rumors, please write to Chairman Williams.

Legal Update

It was reported in the September BULLETIN that unhinged Alliance detractor and would-be nemesis Garland Corse aka "DeCourcy," not pleased with Circuit Court Judge Dent's denial of her Motion to Dismiss the lower court's order that she either return items stolen from Chairman Williams or pay him approximately $2,200, she and her obliging attorney submitted a writ of prohibition to the West Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals. This was an attempt to overturn Circuit Court Judge Dent's denial of their earlier meritless motion, the purpose of which was simply to avoid returning the stolen property or value thereof.

The beautiful hand-made wooden Life Rune plaque used by the New England National Alliance for its meetings. Identical plaques are available to members and supporters (see text on pages eight and nine).

Corse's behavior is like a defendant in TV "Judge Judy"'s court appealing an adverse ruling by Judy to the New Jersey Supreme Court of Appeals, and, as plaintiff, naming the Honorable Judith Scheinlin as her defendant — then losing, and later having to appear before the Honorable (and by then highly irritated) Judge Judy for final disposition of the case.

It's hard to follow, but the parties' attorneys did appear before the highest court in West Virginia on 4 October, and the court's ruling in Garland DeCourcy, Petitioner vs. The Honorable Jennifer P. Dent and William W. Williams, Respondents, was handed down on 17 November. It is ten pages of legalese, but those interested can find it here: <http://> www.courts.wv.gov/supreme-court/docs/fall2017/17-0572.pdf

The short version is this, on the last page: "CONCLUSION — Based upon the foregoing, the requested writ is denied."

So, the loser Corse keeps losing, as does her landlord/roommate Bob DeMara, who pays her attorney thousands of dollars to keep coming up with frivolous criminal charges, civil suits, appeals, and even this writ of prohibition. Our hostile West Virginia neighbors' coup attempt last year failed miserably and their abuse of the judicial process has so far failed. How will Corse do, standing before Judge Dent in the two still-pending actions in which she and I are the litigants?

At yet another pre-trial hearing on 29 November, a new trial date was set by Judge Dent for 9 February, 2018, for the appeal of Chairman Williams' misdemeanor conviction for the alleged assault of Ms. Corse in September of 2015. No trial date has been set yet for Corse's appeal before Judge Dent of the lower court's ruling ordering her to return the items she stole from Chairman Williams, also back in 2015.

Correspondence

Greetings Chairman Williams! Our group of Northeast National Alliance members has sent you a gift, and you should be receiving it within a few days. It's a wooden Life Rune plaque that a friend makes for us [see photo on previous page]. We have one hanging on the wall in the room we use for meetings. We hope you enjoy it.

We conducted our gathering this month on Sunday, November 19th, at a trusted member's home. The meeting was opened up with the following statement: "Given that our people are subjected to so much manufactured hatred, simply attending a meeting of like-minded White men and women constitutes, in itself, an act of courage."

The two-hour meeting covered many topics including WWII, the so-called Holocaust, our current political environment, gun control, and concluded with a consideration of the question, "Where do we go from here?" We are planning more activities for getting our Alliance message out to our people. A date was set for the December meeting. With honor and respect, — R.M., New Hampshire

Dear Chairman Williams: Not everyone in New Orleans has entirely lost his or her mind yet. In a poll at the Best of New Orleans blog, readers were asked "Do you think the city's bike rental plan, which launches next month, will be a success?" Forty-six per cent. of respondents answered "No, too much theft and vandalism for it to work."

We have lost both Zundels in just over two months. Father Time disposes of us all. I received the notice of Ingrid's death from her office, with, "Her work ended with her passing." But what of the extensive Zundel library, and all of those documents, films, videos, and interviews that they had collected? Surely these priceless things were willed to someone who would carry on the Zundels' work or pass them on to other responsible loyalists who could use them. Hopefully the Zundel heirs have not yielded to "P.C." — O.C., Louisiana

Chairman Williams responds: We will see, O.C. I had the same reaction as yours when first reading that Ingrid's work had "ended with her passing": Our work has not ended! There was considerable overlap of supporters for the Zundels' outreach and that of the Alliance, so you are one of many who are concerned about the disposition of the Zundel library, including me — especially since my tour of the facility with Ingrid in September. Most of our conversation for the couple of hours we had together centered around race and how to reach our people using new media, and around books: It was clear to me that she wanted to keep her library intact, including its shelving, and expand

it. Ingrid was a frail 81, and grieving Ernst's death the previous month, but bright-eyed and attentive, with no idea whatsoever that she would die in less than a month herself.

It goes to show the importance of getting one's affairs in order before Father Time calls. Soon after I became Chairman three years ago I updated my Last Will and Testament, making my wife Lana the primary beneficiary and executor. She understands the clause stating that Dr. William Pierce's library (that I'd recently purchased) belongs to the National Alliance, not to me. We didn't know then that we would be attracting other valuable collections, or that we would undertake the greater William Luther Pierce Memorial Library building project — but that has become an ongoing part of our rebuilding of the National Alliance, and of our efforts to honor its founder. Members should know that Dr. Pierce's library, and all we add to it, belong to the National Alliance in perpetuity, never to be sold again.

R.M., Your group of Alliance members are doing things right, courageously getting to know one another and bringing others into your circle. The three framed, oak panel Life Rune plaques you sent are beautiful. We're keeping two of them here in Tennessee and will deliver the third to West Virginia. I'm sending you a check for $70 (including shipping) to send another one to Kevin Strom. If other members would like a flawlessly crafted plaque like this at that price, contact Northeast National Alliance, PO Box 1405, Raymond, NH 03077.

Dear Chairman: Wisconsin looks like it's fertile territory to do some new recruiting. I have several hundred flyers and a few Building a New White World booklets, so I'll see if I can't find some receptive cheeseheads up there over the holidays. I got my pin and card in the mail yesterday — they turned out great. Nice touch including Herr Schmidt's pin. What a fascinating life that man led. Hope you guys have a good Thanksgiving. — D.S., Tennessee

Chairman Will: I received my card and pins yesterday. I am honored to have gotten the gold Life Rune pin and will wear it with pride. Respectfully, — J.W., Virginia

Commentary by Chairman William White Williams

The Cosmotheist Community: Being Good and Doing Good

Each Alliance member in good standing was mailed his new laminated Alliance Membership card and Life Rune lapel pin this month. Processing the mailing gave me the opportunity to familiarize myself closely with our membership, as well as with supporters who are not members. Coordinating membership is a full time job and we hope to have a motivated, ideologically sound staffer to do that again for us at some point. Only four gold pins were issued to members who have contributed well beyond the average in their efforts and sacrifices for the cause. Everyone else received the silver pins, and now know they can earn and receive gold by their deeds. Any supporter who is eligible for member status will also receive his card and pin if he chooses to upgrade from supporter to member. My predecessor, Erich Gliebe, did away with the Alliance as a membership organization in 2012, mostly in a mistaken attempt to portray the National Alliance as a kinder, gentler, "big tent" group of people mostly interested in European cultural festivals. It was then that I and Kevin Strom decided that we would start a new National Alliance, with members and with a National Alliance Membership Handbook, based on the uncompromising 1993 Handbook that Kevin and I helped Dr. Pierce produce while we were both on staff in West Virginia. Mr. Gliebe also did away with the Handbook when he did away with membership. The National Alliance that Dr. Pierce founded and Erich Gliebe frittered away was officially turned over to me by the Alliance's board two years later, in October of 2014, and in the three years since then we have been slowly rebuilding in conformance with the original Piercean model. We've not had the wherewithal to publish an updated and revised Membership Handbook yet, but we will get to that when circumstances and funds permit and every member will receive his copy then.

Report from the Mountain

David Pringle has performed the vital task of maintaining a presence on our West Virginia campus for the past 18 months as virtually an unpaid volunteer. He has worked under unusually hostile conditions, especially with enemies of the Alliance literally inside our gate. Now that Jay Hess is on staff and holding down the fort, David will be making his long-planned trip back to Arizona to pick up his large lathe and other gunsmithing equipment — in order to return and set up shop in Pocahontas County, near our campus, building and repairing firearms — his vocation — and remaining an important member of the Cosmotheist Community.

The electricity to both our big barn and to our two-story warehouse was restored this month after going dark more than two years ago — deliberately sabotaged, says the electrician who made the repair. (Bob DeMarais, the hostile neighbor who lives directly adjacent to those structures and who was angry that I wouldn't sell them to him for pennies on the dollar, as former chairman Gliebe had agreed to do, is a suspect.) We also had the well company that had drilled three wells for Dr. Pierce in 1984 come out this month, pull the 350' line in our primary well, and replace the failed submersible pump. Having water restored in the farmhouse and to some other structures was a priority that is now accomplished.

Dr. William Pierce on Our Cosmotheist Community

I recently came across a 12-page BULLETIN-sized Community News, No. 1, published by the Cosmotheist Community Church, dated January 1988. It could be said that this was Dr. Pierce's first "Report from the Mountain," dealing with the pioneering "CCC settlement in West Virginia," as it was then described. This not only has historical value for the descriptions of The Land and of what was going on with those living and working there at the time, but for its insight into William Pierce's vision of our church community.

We begin, without the context of the first nine pages, with Dr. Pierce explaining his problems with the Jews and the IRS over the tax-exempt status of the Cosmotheist Community Church. He then begins a profound discussion touching on our desired separation from the mainstream, on the spiritual sickness and divided souls among our people, on our novel solution to these problems, and ending with an explanation of his use of the word "God."

...That dispute began in 1986, when the ADL, the Jewish secret-police agency, complained to the IRS about our exemption, and it may not be resolved for another year. Although the government doesn't believe the Jews' wild claims about missile silos and drug-processing laboratories, they undoubtedly are scratching their heads trying to figure out exactly what our plans are, despite the fact that I have explained our purpose here to them several times. This is not surprising to me, because I have found the same lack of understanding among many persons who are friendly to us. I remember my embarrassment when I spoke at a meeting of another group about a year ago, and before my talk the group's leader, who had visited our settlement earlier, told his members that what we are doing here is developing an all-White vacation resort, where White racists can bring their families for a few days of all-White socializing each year.

When I have explained what we really are doing, and why, to people with such a notion in their heads, I often have gotten a polite smile and a look of incomprehension in return. People who have grown up in the television age may have a healthy racial xenophobia and a professed desire to make radical changes in the government, yet still have values and tastes acquired from decades of watching television. It is difficult for them to understand why anyone would prefer poverty and hard work to the sugar-tit. No matter what I say, they suspect there is an ulterior motive. I have the same uncomfortable feeling that we are on different wavelengths when I talk to some of our supporters about the U.S. economy. Everyone agrees with me that only an economic collapse can save our race, and they profess to be praying day and night for one. Yet I look at the way they live, and I cannot help but wonder. Do these people, who depend on continued U.S. prosperity for all of their comforts and security, really want an end to that prosperity? Are they really willing to give up their employment and their life-style, their familiar daily routine and all of its benefits, and descend into the chaos of civil war in order to secure the future of the race? Rooted in the cities as they are, totally dependent on the uninterrupted flow of commerce and the undisturbed functioning of a complex governmental infrastructure, are they not fooling themselves when they talk of working to overturn the System?

Of course, it is necessary for most people, even those who have good values and attitudes, to remain in the cities and stay plugged into the economic mainstream as long as they can. Most of our own support comes from such people. But a certain degree of ambivalence is almost inevitable under such circumstances. The only sure way to avoid ambivalence is to be separate from and independent of the mainstream.

I am convinced that it is important for some of us, even now, to strive to avoid having a divided soul. Even more am I convinced that if we are to cure ourselves of the spiritual sickness which led to the present condition of the race, we must raise a new generation with undivided souls. (And, of course, it is at root a spiritual sickness, not the Jews

"We put a greater emphasis on doing good than on merely being good. That is, we are not here just to try to improve ourselves and our children spiritually, but above all to be able to work more effectively at improving the spiritual condition of our people everywhere."

or the Blacks or any other external enemy, which has brought the race to the brink of extinction. The Jews may be carriers of the germs of the sickness, and they certainly know how to take advantage of it, but the fact remains that until we cure ourselves we will not be able to deal with external enemies.) We do not even have a sure model for raising spiritually healthy children, although we have a number of partial models, from the ancient Greeks, Romans, and Teutons to the Germans of the 1933-1945 era, from which we can draw inspiration. We know some things which we want to avoid — permissiveness, Judeo-Christianity, non-White music and other alien cultural influences — but it is more difficult to specify the positive influences we want to have a formative role. Undoubtedly any successful model which we develop will require an open mind, patience, and time. But it will also require that the adults involved have as clear a view as possible of their goal.

And what is our goal? I have stated it in political terms and in racial terms elsewhere. Here I will state it in more personal terms: What we want to do is understand who we are and what our proper purpose is; we want to raise an understanding of those things to an omnipresent consciousness, by proper living; also through proper living, we want to utilize our knowledge, consciousness, and strength to serve our proper purpose for the remainder of our lives.

In different words: Our aim is to know God, our relationship to God, and the will of God; and then to serve God as best we can. And our belief is that, if we take our aim seriously, we must, to the extent practicable, separate ourselves from the mainstream.

I hasten to add that we put a greater emphasis on doing good than on merely being good. That is, we are not here just to try to improve ourselves and our children spiritually, but above all to be able to work more effectively at improving the spiritual condition of our people everywhere. Nevertheless, being good puts anyone in a better position to do good.

I also add that, although I have used the phrase "the will of God," which sounds vaguely anthropomorphic, no such meaning is intended. Our God is the Cosmos, and the will we seek to know is that cosmic drive toward more and more highly organized states, higher and higher levels of self-consciousness, which has impelled the evolution of the universe since its beginning, and which impels our race to surpass itself, to prepare the way for the coming of the Superman. The drive is in our genes, but all too often we have failed to be properly motivated by it and have not followed the course of greatest progress. Certainly, mainstream America has taken a course entirely at odds with this drive. We intend to get back on course, and separation should be an aid to that end.

I'll write more in future issues about our reason for building this community and how we're going about it. For now, let it suffice to say that it looks like we're finally beginning to move ahead, after three years of hanging on by our fingernails.

W. L. P.

It's that Cosmotheist straight talk of Dr. Pierce's — cutting to the heart of things, and expressed in terms I could understand — that attracted me, and some of you, to him and to the National Alliance years ago, and I'm reasonably sure that is what attracted many of our Alliance's newest members as well. We will continue to attract others like ourselves by remaining true to the Piercean world view, and spreading it far and wide so that every man and woman in whom it will resonate has a chance to know of it and respond to it.

Around that core of spiritually healthy racial loyalists we will build a movement of will and determination that will transform this world forever.

W. W. W.
